All I can say is yes... and it is lonely living this life... alone in a crowd of people ... I feel like I'm greedy. I found my one in a billion once... but that thin, all too permeable one way membrane opened up one day and now she is on the other side... leaving me to make sense of everything without her input... her calming effect. And what a catch I am... this guy that speaks the language of music, profoundly missing his songbird... finishing our work that was slated for release two years ago, as our first international release on our new label... wondering if there will ever be a time where I think again, "I'm glad I lived this long, to feel this way again"... but I suppose there must be something to me... that it sounds attractive to consider being the "two time recipient" of the luckiest guy alive trophy... and that one trophy I got recently... at a support group... we all were talking about our lives and I did my spiel... all the things that give me pause, keep me awake... and when I got done the room was quiet... the meeting coordinator asked the room what they thought. They all nodded their heads and one said "you're the only one that belongs here"... to my confusion. And the coordinator nodded back "looks like we found our winner!!" And they called me up and everyone clapped... and I couldn't believe it... I didn't know it was a contest... I got a little trophy... or maybe it was a hood ornament... I'm not sure... I'm used to being underwhelmed in these situations... you listen to every person's words with rapt attention, because you really want them to say something that mitigates... but they don't... but it turns out I just needed this thing... this trophy, which is of an angel bowling, for some reason, and a scale replica of the world's tiniest violin... the only thing is... once you've won this, you can't really look at others and think you have it better... because that's your job now... at least until the winner is announced next year. Gonna be a long year.. lol this is the latest song I've almost finished... https://youtu.be/JnVpUPwTDYs